“ One year ago today, the world lost my dear friend Alisa, but her light still shines so brightly in my heart. She was my best friend at Penn State my partner in every adventure and I had the honor of standing beside her as her maid of honor. She made life more fun, more exciting, more alive.

Alisa was the smartest person I've ever known, with a spark that inspired everyone around her. I carry her laughter, her wisdom, and her spirit with me always. Forever loved, forever missed. Until we meet again, Maryellen

“ I first met Alisa playing soccer. We went to elementary school and high school together. She's a beautiful spirit and as someone whose life she touched, I will be forever grateful.

“ Alisa was my first camp friend. It was my first summer in the US and I was absolutely Alien to anything pertaining to “American Jew”. So my parents sent me to learn how to be “that” at camp Livingston. Being from Israel we were secular. Alisa helped me learn the prayers, laughed at my Israeli accent and made me feel at home. I personally did not enjoy camp, but my friendship with her kept me there for 9 weeks. Her laugh was infectious. Alisa would make up funny sayings. I remember having a dark blue-silver lipstick we both wore and she called it “our sucking toilet lipstick”. I remember we had to do our own laundry. I had no clue and volunteered to do both of ours. My parents sent me a brand new red jumpsuit. I washed it on hot with all her favorite white socks. She was very upset about her socks being pink.

Over the years we lost touch until Facebook. We reconnected and had a long conversation and texted a few times. I’m so sorry for her loss. She was such a wonderful person. May her memory be a blessing.

“ Alisa and I met through a mutual friend. I was starting a publishing department for UC and Alisa, already an accomplished professor, had just called molested a masters in design. A few months late she became the first book and journals designer for the press, and even created our house style guide. I am so grateful to have gotten to work with her for the past 7 years. I will miss you, your laugh, creativity, and how you turned my ideas into reality. Thank you.

“ Alisa and met through a mutual friend who seat is together at a wedding. I was starting a new publishing company at UC and Alisa taught there. She seemed like a natural fit as a humanities faculty member to start designing books for us. We connected immediately and she became my first, and longest freelance designer to work with the press. In additional to designing covers and interiors for our books and journals, she designed our entire brand and style guide which we still use today. I am grateful for the years I got to know her through our work together. With sadness and gratitude I am sharing her work
