“ Beni and I had a uniquely warm, frank and sometimes mutually challenging friendship during our years of working together. He demonstrated the courage of his convictions every time we spoke.

One day, Israel's minister of communications for an Israeli government agency (I forget the specific agency) visited my office, and I took him to Beni's work location to meet a genuine landsman. Their introduction sparked smiles and discussion in Hebrew, so I was lost from their exchange. But, I could hear and sense the passion each one expressed to the other, not knowing the issues they discussed.

As the Israeli minister was leaving, he thanked me for introducing him to Beni and said he wished they could have him return.

I have always remembered Beni and can visualize him now.

My condolences to all Beni's mishpocha.
