Welcome to GoFundMe

Asking for help takes courage, and we're here to support you by offering our top suggestions for success during the first stages of your fundraising journey. Story - Telling your story clearly and sincerely is really important. Donors want to know why you're raising money and how their donation will be used in the first few sentences.

Sharing - Share with close friends and family first through texts, emails, direct messages, or phone calls. If a few can donate even $5 each, your fundraiser will show some momentum. This can encourage even more donors to get involved when they see your fundraiser on social media.

Team Fundraising - Creating a small team to help you fundraise can mean more exposure and support for your cause. You can invite friends and family to join your team anytime.

“ one time ben told me to, “love people even if i don’t like them”. he taught me not to burn bridges because you never know when you’ll need to cross back over. i think about him all the time

“ Hey, I know this is a bit of a late memory of Ben, but I’ve been thinking about him lately and thought I should show what I feel. Ben and I haven’t been too close since we were little. But when we were young, I remember all the great times we had, including the times he would make everybody in class laugh at wise. Ben was very kind and amazing to everyone. It’s been almost a year without him. But i’ve thought of him every day since. Ben will always be in my heart and I will never forget the impact he had on me to be a more carrying and better person. I also remember all of the times he would sing to Eminem, which he was very good at. I hope your happier now, because you truly deserve it.

“ I was researching pottery ideas for my Girl Scouts on my FB page. This photo of Ben showed up. That's about the age I remember him most. Little with huge grin!

“ Ben, you were such a loving grandson. I have happy memories of times spent with you, especially our annual family Florida vacation trips. Your interests and understanding of technology always amazed me. You will be missed by our family and your friends. I pray you have found peace. With much love, Grandma Lois

“ Ben was an energetic and opinionated student. He loved creating Google slideshows with Trump in one of his last slides, describing his disgust of the president’s actions. He loved coding. He was gifted. He was a bright spot in my teaching career. I loved him. He would shock us with new haircuts of Mohawk or shaved completely. He wasn’t afraid to share what he knew and was eventually willing to stand down when challenged by others. I believed Ben would become a Cyber security expert for a huge corporation one day. Or maybe he’d be a spy for intelligence. I thought I’d see him again. He will always be in my heart. I’m a better teacher having taught him.

“ Beth and Brian, one of my earliest memories of Ben was meeting you in the waiting room of COTI, I think. When our kids were so little. We had just moved to Cincinnati and I remember thinking what a patient and kind Mom you were (and are), Beth. Then I realized you lived down the street, and we had kids in the same school. I am grateful we became friends and have shared joys and sorrows over the years. While this is truly a time of deep sorrow and grief, I sincerely hope memories of your fun times with your amazing son will continue to bring peace and comfort and give you solace. My prayers are with Ben and your family.
