“Gail was my therapist for only a year and a half, and in that time, I was able to make huge strides, in my relationships with family members and especially with my partner. Gail is the driving force behind me being in the loving relationship I’m in today. I believe we challenged each other (I asked for frameworks / homework after each session, and she pushed me to rethink so many of my concrete conclusions). Gail had an impeccable taste in fashion, and I miss her calming therapist’s chair and indoor tree plant. Her office was such a warm place to be. She seemed to always be expanding and improving, with a curious and fresh outlook towards how the world was changing and what there was to explore in the world of psychology. Gail was a pivotal person for me, at age 26, and I believe she changed the trajectory of my life. I miss her dearly, and her candid feedback, and her wise counsel, as I imagine all of her patients do. What an honor, to have known someone who had such a positive influence on so many people’s lives.

“Dr. Gail” began helping me in the early 90s, turning my life around —enough so that I had the courage to arrange financing, job arrangements, and health care support to begin my PhD in 1994. Over the years she helped me through many difficult times and she will be sorely missed by hundreds or thousands of clients.

“ Dr Friedman was a wonderful caring person. I will miss Gail very much. We both had miniature golden doodles and we would laugh and share stories about them. My heart is sadden. My prayers goes out to her family.

“ Dr. Gail was a light to me for eleven years, counseling and teaching and then counseling both my husband and me for three years after that.
Love was her main directive.
Meeting her and Dr. Richard Friedman one night and seeing their wonderful relationship was the moment that convinced me to put myself under her care.
I owe so much of my happiness to her.

“ Gail and I met at The Cincinnati Woman's Club 15 years ago. She and I became fast friends and worked on many community projects together. Gail had a heart of gold and true dedication to community service. We shared many wonderful experiences together. When my husband passed away in 2014, Gail and Dick were steadfast friends who helped me weather that storm. She was a remarkable woman. I shall always treasure our time together. I will miss her.
