“ Joel Warm was a great scholar and an exceptional mentor who genuinely cared for his students. He served as a second father to all of his graduate students, myself included. I have yet to meet another person as diligent and as devoted to his work as Dr. Warm. He put his heart and his soul into everything he did. He leaves behind a truly magnificent legacy. He will be missed in many ways by many people.

“ Joel was truly one of the greats both professionally and personally. He helped me so much in coming to America and in my career, as he helped so many other colleagues, students, and friends. He is terribly missed but his memory will remain as a lodestar for all of us who knew him.

“ What a lovely treat to read through Dr. Warm's reviews from his students. He has clearly had a sustainable impact on research, but most significantly, in instilling a belief in, and commitment to, quality education. This is an enduring, lasting contribution of truly profound degree, that lives on in his son Eric.

“ Dear Fran, I and family just returned on 08/12/17 from a trip out of the country and was shocked to learn of the sad news. I had planned to pay Joel a visit before school starts and pick his brain about some ideas on projects. His friendship, care and loyalty to others have always been the part of him that shines through. The field of psychology and human factors had lost a pioneer; More than that, the community of researchers has lost someone who truly cared about human factors and its future. I missed his chuckle and his straight talk already, and I cannot begin to imagine how difficult a time this will be for you. I only know that his care for research can only be matched by his care for you and his family, and I hope he is smiling in heaven learning from God Himself the answers to many of his questions that he has held over the years. May God's peace be with him and you.
